

Publish a Book with Kids' Own Publishing

Would you like to tell your own story in a full colour paperback book?

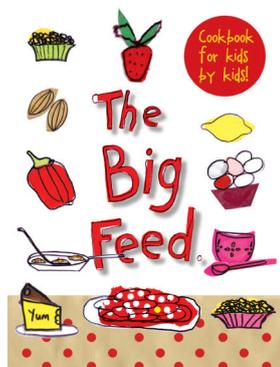

How?

A Kids' Own artist, or team of artists, will work with your students over one term to explore the publishing process through a combination of the following: photocopied origami and digital making techniques (using the WePublish app); peer to peer learning/student mentoring (older years); collaborative writing; art-making for book illustration; and the editing and design of a 16 or 20 page full colour paperback book with ISBN, launched with hoopla at the end of the project.

Students (yes, even the youngest) direct theme and genre and books have included, amongst others, fiction set in the local neighbourhood, a newspaper, and an imaginary travel guide.

Includes two-hour Professional Learning workshop for staff.

Why?

Publishing a book:

- Encourages children to explore their creativity and involves artists in educational outcomes.
- Brings together children, families and communities as co-creators, providing opportunities for everyone to participate and share achievement.
- Promotes diversity and celebrates the unique stories of individuals and communities.
- Contributes to children's social, physical and mental well-being, based on a strong sense of their own identity and their connection with the world around them.
- Supports better educational outcomes for children and improved literacy in all its forms – reading, writing, numeracy, verbal and non-verbal communication.
- Requires collaboration between early childhood professionals, children, families and communities.

Cost

$7000-$10000
